Although speakers of both languages can understand each other, there are some slight differences between them. Urdu draws on influences from Arabic and Persian, and the language is written in Arabic script that moves from left to right across the page. Hindi uses Devanagari script written from left to right.Google TranslateGoogle Translate is available on a web page and as an app for mobile devices. You can then copy and paste the Urdu text into your working document.Translation ServicesAlthough machine translation works in some situations, there are times when you should consider using a human translation service. These services can be more reliable than a machine because the people completing the translation know how to make sure the words on the page reflect the context of the document.To use these services, you submit the document to a website. They start with machine translation, but then a person who is fluent in the language reviews it make sure the translated text is accurate. They also check the actual words used to ensure there is nothing offensive in the new text. By Fraser Sherman Updated February 22, 2022 Almost 70 million people speak Urdu as a first language, and another 100 million speak it as their second language, according to Britannica. Urdu is the official primary language of Pakistan and a secondary language of India. As native Urdu speakers have spread worldwide, there's a corresponding need for Urdu interpreter jobs in many places. If you're translating or interpreting between Urdu and English or Urdu and Hindi, you need complete fluency in both languages before starting work. Most employers also prefer to hire college graduates. Urdu translator and Urdu interpreter jobs are not the same. People often use the terms interchangeably, Lionbridge notes, but translators work on written material while interpreters handle the spoken word. While Urdu sounds close to Hindi, the writing system is different and heavily influenced by Arabic. The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) covers three main varieties of interpreter positions, including Urdu interpreter jobs: simultaneous interpretation, consecutive interpretation right after the speaker finishes, or converting written documents into spoken language. Simultaneous interpretation requires intense concentration and the ability to interpret quickly. Consecutive Urdu interpreter jobs require substantial note-taking. If you're translating, the standards are different than for Urdu interpreter jobs. The goal is to capture not only the information but the tone of the original, which is tough if the document includes slang, cultural references or jokes. Translators work on the computer with the help of translation software, usually receiving assignments digitally. That makes it possible to work on Urdu translator jobs from home. Most translators and interpreters are specialists. It's not just a matter of choosing Urdu translator versus Urdu interpreter jobs, but each area contains specialists. Community interpreters, for example, attend business and public meetings, parent-teacher conferences and new home purchases where they're needed. Medical interpreters work in health care settings as go-betweens for patients and nurses. A medical translator works with a variety of material – research, regulations, patient consent, website information – turning it from another language into Urdu or vice versa. A legal translator might turn American legal documents into Urdu for the benefit of immigrants who can't read English. Literary translators convert fiction from one language into another, such as a Pakistani Urdu novel into Hindi or English. The BLS says the essential requirement for Urdu interpreter jobs and translator gigs is that you're fluent in Urdu and at least one other language. In the United States, jobs might involve English/Urdu translation; in India, it might be Urdu/Hindi. If you're working at Urdu translator jobs from home, you might be asked to translate anything from any tongue. In addition to language proficiency, employers typically want at least a bachelor's degree before hiring an interpreter or translator. While you might want a foreign language or linguistics degree, business, communications and social science are also acceptable. Anyone working as a legal or medical translator or interpreter will need fluency in the specialized terminology those fields use. Employers expect you to demonstrate complete fluency in Urdu and your other languages from Day One. However, if you're entering a field such as legal translation, you may receive some training in the field's distinctive terminology. ZipRecruiter says Urdu translator jobs pay an average salary of $45,272. While there was no average salary for Urdu interpreter jobs at ZipRecruiter, the website points out that the positions it sees range from $34,000 to $75,000 in salary. BLS explains the pay for interpreters and translators varies widely due to multiple factors. Your fluency in the languages you speak is one. The type of employer – a court, medical facility or business expanding into India or Pakistan – makes a big difference.
